Incentivized reviews drive conversion and sales for Under Armour

Under Armour understands the value in providing customers with a positive shopping experience and helping them find the right products. The brand achieves this by interjecting direct customer feedback into the buying journey through ratings and reviews.

“We wanted prospective customers to hear directly from like-minded consumers who had made a prior purchase to match them with products best suited for their individual needs,” said Katie Romano, Ecommerce Program Analyst at Under Armour.

In addition, Under Armour is consistently releasing new sports apparel, shoes, and gear to meet the consumer demand for innovation. This creates a need to collect content aggressively and quickly, so products can have reviews in place as they become available.

HOW TRUSTWORTHY AND IMPACTFUL ARE INCENTIVIZED REVIEWS

Under Armour and Bazaarvoice partnered on a study to understand the relationship between incentivized reviews and conversion—are shoppers more or less likely to buy a product when they know many of the reviewers received something in exchange for their review?

The study measured year-over-year (YoY) sales and review data across more than 10,000 products on Under Armour’s website. The study compared sales before and after collecting reviews from customers who were given a discount on future purchases for submitting a review. The campaign generated several

AT A GLANCE

Challenge

Allow customers to hear directly from like-minded consumers.

Solution

Accelerate review collection by incentivizing customers to leave reviews.

Benefit

An increase in review volume resulted in an increase in YoY conversion, even when reviews were incentivized.

One of the biggest takeaways from this analysis was that the increase in volume and conversion rate indicated that consumers are more confident in their purchase decision knowing that the product will better serve their specific needs.

thousand reviews, all of which were displayed to shoppers with a badge identifying the content as incentivized.

The study showed that an increase in review volume from the campaign was followed by an increase in YoY conversion. Even products going from zero reviews to 1-4 reviews experienced a conversion lift. The positive impact of review volume on conversion proved true regardless of whether or not the reviews were incentivized.

In fact, products that received reviews through the incentivized campaign saw a 0.44% increase in conversion over a four-month period, compared to the same four months the prior year. This is contrasted with the 0.21% increase in conversion for the same period for products that did not receive an incentivized review. The additional consumer-generated content from the campaign generated additional sales for Under Armour.

"One of the biggest takeaways from this analysis was that the increase in volume and conversion rate indicated that consumers are more confident in their purchase decision knowing that the product will better serve their specific needs," said Romano.

The brand can now confidently accelerate review collection by incentivizing customers to leave reviews.

EXTENDING THE REACH OF CGC

The brand employs a variety of tactics to continuously collect authentic feedback, beyond just the incentivized program. The impact of the volume-driving efforts is compounded with syndication, as reviews collected on one of Under Armour's websites are shared with the brand's websites in other regions. This has resulted in more than 300,000 reviews across the Bazaarvoice Network.

"Syndication has positively impacted the retail channel and benefits the consumer, whether they are coming from Under Armour directly or from a wholesaler," said Romano. "Our goal is to make the shopper experience seamless no matter what retailer a customer chooses to buy from by providing them with information on the products that builds confidence in their purchase decision knowing that the product will better serve their specific needs."
